Fuchsistan Decides:
Foxs On The Dinner Table?
The Issue

In a bid to provide a new revenue stream for Fuchsistan's Beef-Based Agriculture industry, it has been suggested that Foxs could be added to the menu.

The Debate

1. "The fact is, the Fox population is out of control," says Beef-Based Agriculture spokesperson Beth Jones. "We have to do something about them anyway, so why not market them as tasty snacks? We could have Fox kebabs, Fox pies, Fox-on-a-sticks--the possibilities are endless! Let's not pass up this golden opportunity to provide a feast, if you will, for our economy."

2. "I agree that something needs to be done about Fox over-population," says random passer-by Miranda Steele, "but eating them? That's kind of gross. Let's just shoot the ones we have to and shovel their bodies into ditches like normal."

3. "I am shocked and appalled!" declared SPCA President Dave O'Bannon. "If anyone needs to be culled, it's us humans. The Foxs were here first, remember? We need to take this as a sign to get our industry--agriculture in particular--to back off. The Fox is part of what makes Fuchsistan a great nation!"
